I would have to say last year when we all thought that there was a gunman on campus. You hear about these in other states, but for some reason you just don't think that it could happen in Chattanooga, but it did. It made me more aware of what is going on not only on campus but at shopping malls, my neighborhood.

The Effects of an Experiential Adapting Fitness Course on Students’ Attitudes Toward Adults with Intellectual Disabilities

Methods
- Students in the study were divided into three groups: control, intervention, and comparison.
- The control group received traditional instruction, while the intervention group participated in the experiential course.
- The comparison group was provided with a combination of both traditional and experiential instruction.

Introduction
- The purpose of the study is to determine if an experiential adaptation can change students' attitudes toward individuals with intellectual disabilities.

Results
- The intervention group showed a significant increase in positive attitudes toward adults with intellectual disabilities compared to the control and comparison groups.

Conclusion
- The results indicate that an experiential adaptation can effectively change students' attitudes toward adults with intellectual disabilities.

In my first year at UTC, a student suffered the devastating loss of a younger brother to gun violence. At every level--from administration, to faculty, to fellow students--everyone rallied around her to ensure she had the support she needed to complete her academic work and secure her personal well-being. I have never been at a more supportive, person-focused institution, and count myself lucky to be among such good people.

In college, I didn’t think my digital work was "real Art" and hid it away until close to graduation. Why’re you just now showing me this? Because it isn’t real? Hello, I am a terrible representation of Prof. Ron Buffington.
