

On October 17, 2023, the School of Nursing hosted the Tennessee Department of Health who presented a Hemodialysis Infection Prevention Simulation. This is a program designed by the TDH to help educate hemodialysis nurses, technicians, and staff in the state of Tennessee in their efforts to reduce overall dialysis infections. The program is based on CDC guidelines and uses both presentations and hands-on activities.

The twenty attendees earned continuing education credits. Chris Smith, the director of the School of Nursing said, “ we were thrilled to be able to offer the space for this workshop in our Skills Lab here on campus. With the students on fall break, this was a perfect time to open our facility to nurses from across the community as they renewed their skills in hemodialysis.”
